Comprehensive Sex Education Tied to Programs to Sexually Groom Children

Brenda Lebsack

Schools are adopting programs tied to Comprehensive Sex Education and others that are teaching a hyper-sexualized narrative on gender and personal relationships. Behind these programs is a system that is pulling children from the authority of their parents, and exposing them to direct lines of communication with adults on sexual platforms. Children who refuse the new sexual and political narratives face various forms of racial sexual discrimination and parents who refuse to acknowledge the sexual narratives can be accused of "spiritual abuse". According to Brenda Lebsack, a teacher of 30 years and a former school board member for Orange Unified School District, these programs equate to the grooming of children and are part of a broader agenda.
